RICHMOND REVISITED.

A hundred thousand soldiers had spent A hundred thousand soldiers had spent four long, weary years in the effort to get into Richmond, during which time they had sadly heaped Virginia soil over another hundred thousand of their comtades, slain by bullet and disease. Every square mile for leagues around had been made "sacred soil" indeed by the blood of brave men who had bared their shosoms to tornadoes of lead and siroccos of iron because of their love for the of iron because of their love for the Union and the dear old flag. As our train draws nearer the city we look out upon historic fields so full of reminiscences of the loss who have not closely studied its manifestations here cannot have deads because the state of the North know next to nothing about such a sectional education, and those who have not closely studied its manifestations here cannot brave deeds, heroic endurance, and events appreciate its power over the minds which will live long after we are forgotten, each other wildly through our minds.

Home, sitting upon her seven hills, which had been the centre of a nation's interest during along, bloody war. The city was full to overflowing. At the largest hotel all they could offer us were the sleeping-rooms of the colored servants way up under the caves, savory not only of Africa, but of certain other enliving incidents with which most old soldiers have become more or less familiar. We declined Boniface's hospiabout.

A trip to the Capitol and a sight at the historic relies in the State Library countled a most enjoyable trip. Every courtesy was shown us that man could ask, and we carried away from the late capital of the Until orders exhausted, will pay $2.50 per tality, and looked further with no better tality, and looked further with no better tesults. Lumber Dealers, Lu ospitality received from the courteous and untiring lady who managed this well-kept iouse. How deeply our reception told upon the susceptible minds of three of our young Bachelors' Club may be inferred from the fact that persuasion, entreaty, ar-gument, and admonitions of duty alike failed to draw these young gentlemen from the manifold attractions of that mansion, and we were obliged to return to Yorktown without them. we next visited a tobacco-factory, where the whole process of tobacco-manufacture was explained and demonstrated by the hospitable proprietors. On one floor was a most picturesque sight. Long wooden tables ran across the room, piled with cured tobacco in the leaf; and here, some stripping, others twisting, some weighing, and all busy as bees, were rows upon rows of black men and women, boys and girls.

They were typical southern darkies, too, dressed in the mongrel costume of the tribe, but happy, jovial, and industrious.

A southern darky always brightens up at the sight of a blue uniform, and when our management of the little cleared. party had all filed into the little cleared space at the side of the room one bright yellow boy in the centre struck up, "What kine ob stippers do de angels wear?" and the entire force struck in with the refrain. They repeat the line over and over frain. They repeat the line over and over cisms of America and the Americans. At

The next verse was a query as to "What kind of robes the angels wear," and the auswer finally came, "White robes." "What kind of crowns do the angels wear?" was similarly answered, "Starry crowns!" And while the negroes worked, keeping lively time to the music, their strains of melody were simply beautiful, and drew forth round upon round of applause from the listeners. They rendered a "Gloria" as finely as a trained choir, and with excel-lent effect. Following came that well-known plantation melody, "Swing low, sweet chariot," sung very sweetly. Their employers declare that they like to have them sing, for they work better under the influence of the music.

As we approached Rocketts—the steamer landing—we observed a procession ascending the steep hill, which, on nearer approach, proved a remarkable and touching ight; for it was nothing more nor less than the survivors of the First Virginia regiment (Confederate) acting as escort to Aaron-Wilkes Post, Grand Army of the Republic, which had just landed. The ex-Confederate boys, learning of the proposed visit of the Union veterans, had formed. marched to the dock, welcomed their old foes with fraternal cheer, and were escorting them into the city. There they dined and wined them, took them to the Fair and everywhere else, and trested them so well that it is somewhat remarkable that they got away at all. Later we visited St. John's church, in Deposits with State Treasurer......$100,000 90

We drove to the upper part of the city, where, from a sightly plateau jutting out almost into the river, we had a good view of Belle Isle, in the river James. At our feet lay the Tredegar Iron-Works, where the Confederacy manufactured most of its guns and ordnance. The writer met old Indications for To-Day.—For the Mid-General Anderson, the manager of the lie States, northeast to southeast winds, works, a few years ago. He is one of the old-style Virginia gentlemen, a delightful man to meet, but possessed in a fligh degree of those not unpleasant peculiarities for which his section is justly noted. He scorns a Virginian who would not die oetr for his State, and deem it a privilege to be permitted to do so; and another phase may THERMOMETER YESTERDAY: 6 A. It seemed incredible that we were again While we have a great and a just pride in upon those very fields, wearing the same line uniform, yet bound upon a peaceful little State, yet State lines are little to us comparatively, and we would draw our swords almost as freely to defend New York or Pennsylvania. Imagine a woman who could give points to Sarah for leanness, angular, having no longer any age, and who can never have had any beauty—youth, perhaps, but a long time ago. Her mouth is a black hole. Her teeth look like cloves in scaling wax. And people pretend that America is the country of dentists! Shrivelled up, munmified, she wears a cherubin wig.
